Hi Chris,

Mike is a friend whom I met when I worked for LDEQ. He worked for EPA in D.C. but moved to N.M. last year to follow his wife (as explained below).

Do you know if EPA is going to have any employment opportunities related to the spill in CO? Who should he contact?

Thanks,

Debbie

Hi Debbie! As you know from the last time we spoke, my wife Jane took a job at the Indian Health Service to serve at the Northern Navajo Medical Center in Shiprock, NM. As part of that move, I was re-employed by Williams, in their Four Corners Area (FCA) Operations. Ever since we began move planning, I've been trying to find a Federal position in this area. Is there a chance that the Gold King Mine release has opened something up? I live in Farmington, NM, which is right in the heart of it. This would certainly make logistics and planning easier for EPA if I was on board. Let me know if you can learn anything or if there's someone I can contact to determine if there's an opportunity for me here. It's ok working for Williams, but, I always liked being in the Federal system better. In that system, everyone's generally pulling in the same direction and so you feel much more part of a team that's serving the greater good. In private, every department has their own goals/objectives which can make it very difficult to feel part of a team.

Hope you're doing well!

Mike

Public Meetings and Safety Updates

Aztec, NM – An incident information group from the San Juan County CEO's Office along with representatives from the City of Farmington and New Mexico Environment Department Secretary Ryan Flynn, briefed Navajo Nation Speaker, Lorenzo Bates and Tribal Delegates on the Animas River Contamination Event. The team pledged continued assistance and a joint working relationship to mitigate the incident.

The U.S. Environmental Agency has deployed an Incident Command Center to the area and representatives are conducting testing along the Animas River. During the Public Information Meeting held at Farmington Civic Center at 6:00pm, panel members from the EPA, NM Environmental Department, NM Division of Livestock, and NMSU Agricultural Extension Agency, answered written questions from members of the community. The Red Cross handed out bottled water, donated by Pepsi and Costco to those in need.

Public Meetings are planned for each night this week, at the Farmington Civic Center, 6:00pm. Information updates will be given by each of the agencies in attendance to community members.

Residents may think the danger has passed as the river water returns to its normal color. Please use caution and avoid contact with the Animas River Water until test results show it is safe.

Please do not try and flush your water well. By flushing the existing water out of the well you may cause the contaminated water to draw in.
